On October 27, San Francisco building trades leaders met with Transbay Joint Powers Authority (TJPA) representatives for an in-depth tour of the Salesforce Transit Center’s dynamic interior. Following six years of construction that began in 2012, the event highlighted the center’s key role in positioning San Francisco toward a full economic recovery from the pandemic.

With businesses reopening, tenant improvement work is ahead for the transit center’s commercial spaces. That means jobs for building trades members covered under the original project labor agreement.

"The idea that all these tenants are improving and moving in and leasing space here, even on the heels of the pandemic, shows that they want to be here, and they know we’re going to have a great comeback in San Francisco."

The Backstory
The transit center’s PLA was struck in 2011, back when the project was known as the Transbay Transit Center (Salesforce scored naming rights after signing a $100 million sponsorship deal in 2017). From the PLA’s signing, the SF Building Trades and the TJPA have worked in

SF’s Working Class Pursued Closed-Shop City With Vengeance

By Jacob Bourne
Contributing Writer

Ever wonder how San Francisco got so union-strong in the first place? To learn the answer, we must look to the militant tenacity of our union forebears and their absolute commitment to the cause of organized labor to see what clinched the city as a workers’ town.

Workers’ efforts to organize in the city began before 1900, and they were fueled by SF’s whirlwind development in the years following the Gold Rush. The laborers were young, spirited, and unwilling to back down from a fight. As the city was home to one of the first employers’ associations in the U.S., the battle got heated.

Still, those early workers’ doggedness ultimately won out, and San Francisco became California’s top closed-shop town and a national stronghold for unions.

Between 1900 and 1910, the working class gained considerable power through the Union Labor Party — but not before bloodshed. At the turn of the century, a rising cost of living meant that organizing was the critical path to better wages and working conditions for numerous industries. However, efforts to push for a closed-shop city were met with violent opposition under the tenure of Mayor James Phelan, the wealthy son of a Gold Rush banker, who hired henchmen to persecute unionists. Amid the hostile atmo-

Happy Holidays

... and a Happy New Year From Everyone at the San Francisco Building & Construction Trades Council and Organized Labor.
As 2021 draws to a close, a disturbing number of members and apprentices remain out of work and in dire financial straits. The persistently high rate of unemployment makes it clear that the impact of COVID-19 is still very much with us, and the toll that this pandemic has taken on our industry across the crafts continues to cut us all deeply.

We have 1,300 workers still on the bench. That impacts everything. For individuals and families, it makes this time of year—one that should be all about togetherness, celebration, and joy—one lacking in great gifts and good cheer. No one wants to be in such a position during the holidays, but you can be sure somebody alongside whom you’ve worked is going through it this year. Maybe that person is you.

Thankfully, our movement knows how to come together when it most counts. Take, for example, our friends at Local 798 who run the SF Firefighters Toy Program. This holiday toy collection drive is a labor of love that’s been running since 1949. Built on the idea that no child should be without a toy during the holiday season, the program has evolved into a huge volunteer operation in which SF firefighters and their friends give their time to collect and distribute over 200,000 toys to more than 40,000 disadvantaged children year-round. You can find out more at SFFirefighterToys.org.

Hardship assistance is available for any member who might be in need thanks to a joint program between the SF Labor Council and United Way of the Bay Area, with community services director Tom Ryan at the helm. Members who are struggling should not hesitate to contact their union representatives for help getting signed up for this program or others, and union reps should contact me directly if a member is in need. We at the SF Building Trades Council can help with the referral of services and hardship support.

Let me make it clear: If you’re struggling, please don’t suffer. Ask for help if you need it. As a union worker, your brothers, sisters, and siblings are here for you, no questions asked. And we will help you see through these tough times.

The good news is that there is significant work on the horizon as we head into 2022. The bipartisan infrastructure bill was passed, and we’ve already secured a whopping $4.5 billion in federal funds to build out Bay Area mass transit. That money will allow us to head into Phase 2 of the Transbay Project, which means a lot of very consequential and exciting union work that’ll be covered under the project’s original PLA that was struck back in 2011. (Check out the lead story on page 1 and the first “Top Project” on page 8 for more on Phase 2.)

As our leadership and our candidates — including myself — have been on the stump letting everyone know what the infrastructure bill will do and how it will impact the lives of working families. It’s a big deal. Now we need Sacramento to follow suit and fund the resources so that we can get people back to work on climate-resilient infrastructure. We can be at the forefront of connecting people to their work, their homes, and opportunity, all while working to mitigate the climate crisis. That’s what Phase 2 of the Transbay Project will do.

I come to you with more than just promises of the future. Let’s not forget how many great projects are currently underway: the biosolids facility for the SF Public Utilities Commission, Mission Rock, and many more. Others will be arriving soon under PLA’s, including big builds such as the Potrero power plant and Parcel F. Even more are in the pipeline to be announced next quarter.

As we close out the year and head into a new one, I encourage us all to think about how important it is for every one of our tradespeople to get back to work. Let’s think about how high the stakes are when it comes to every vote on a project, every deal struck with a developer, and every aspect of our work. Between the elections and primary elections approach, a big opportunity presents itself for all of us to make sure the voice of working people and families are heard.

We need to be clear-eyed and strategic here, and we need to hit the streets and elect those who have been true friends of the trades and campaign against those who have not. Our candidates need to win so that we can protect our jobs and win new work for the future.

With that, I wish you all a very happy holiday and a successful start to the new year. Here’s to you, and here’s to all of us. Onward and upward, brothers, sisters, and siblings.
An Advocate for the Building Trades
Asbestos-Related Mesothelioma, Lung Cancer and Asbestosis

The Paul Law Firm has been representing the California Building Trades for the past 35 years. We have always been a California-based law firm, specializing in asbestos-related diseases such as mesothelioma, lung cancer and asbestosis, and representing the individual members. We are proud to say that we have had many landmark settlements and verdicts for our union brothers and their families totaling over $3 Billion. One of the highlights of my career was when I, along with our mesothelioma client, Billy Joe Speicher from U.A. Local 250 Steamfitters/Pipefitters, went before the U.S. Senate and testified in front of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senator Arlen Specter, regarding asbestos legislation.

Jerry is also a Founder of the Mesothelioma Research Foundation of America (www.mesorfa.org), along with his wife, Elizabeth Ann Paul, Executive Director, and Jim W. Kellogg, retired International Representative of the California Pipe Trades and past Vice President of the State Building and Construction Trades Council of California, who have all served as Board Members since 2001. Since this time, we undertook the successful funding and opening of a mesothelioma research lab at USC/Norris Comprehensive Medical Center in Los Angeles under the direction of Lab Director Dr. Parkash Gill. Over the past 15 years novel new treatment options, Veglin, which went through FDA-approved clinical trials phase 1 and 2, and now EPH B4, in FDA-approved clinical trials phase 1, have helped expand the depth of research and expand the types of treatment options. This offers greater hope to those afflicted with asbestos-caused cancer, with options not previously available. None of this could have been done without the support of the Building and Construction Trades Council of California and also Southern California Pipe Trades District Council 16, the Heat & Frost Insulators 16, along with the support from the Western States Conference, and all their able leaders and supporting local unions.

As asbestos disease and mesothelioma tend to surface later in life, we recommend workers take a chest X-ray screening every three years where the results are examined by a certified B reader radiologist, a doctor who is additionally trained to know what is and is not an asbestos marker and asbestosis. Plus you will increase your chance of discovery at an early stage, should you have lung cancer, which would likely respond better to treatment options.

A rendering depicts the 4840 Mission Street project when complete.

District 11 is represented by Ahsha Safai.

MAJOR PROJECTS IN THE WORKS:

• Ventana Residences at 99 Ocean, a 100%-union-labor housing project under construction near Balboa Park BART, will offer 193 units, with 25% affordable.

• 4840 Mission Street is a 100%-union-labor mixed-use project in the Excelsior that’ll provide 137 affordable housing units, over 4,000 sq. ft. of retail, and a 10,000-sq.-ft. health clinic.

• Balboa Park Upper Yard is a 100%-union-labor, 100%-affordable-housing project with up to 120 units near BART that’s currently in development.

FAST FACTS

District 11

Neighborhoods: Excelsior, Mission Terrace, Crocker-Amazon, Cayuga, Outer Mission, Ocean View, Merced, and Ingleside

Demographics: District 11 boasts SF’s most ethnically diverse population: 35% Asian, 20% White, 25% Latino, 15% Filipino, and 6% Black. It’s also the youngest, with the most children under 18.

Housing: There are more owner-occupied homes in the district than in any other.

Work: It’s home to the highest concentration of union households in the city, with one out of every four households reporting affiliation.

Play: Popular recreational options include one of SF’s largest parks, McLaren, which falls partially in District 11. Crocker-Amazon Park and Minnie and Lovie Recreation Center both offer a paradise for the sportsperson, with baseball and soccer fields and tennis and basketball courts, plus more.

District 11 is a hidden gem along the middle of San Francisco’s southern border, comprising a part of the city some might call “off the beaten path.” But it’s home to the people who get up every morning to keep the city thriving, many of whom are building trade members, union nurses, teachers, police officers, and firefighters who live in households passed down through multiple generations.

District 11’s supervisor, Ahsha Safai, holds a master’s degree in city planning from MIT and has worked as political director for Janitors Local 87. His involvement in labor spans nearly a decade, and he says he views all City Hall legislation through the lens of how it impacts working families.

That blend of academic smarts and working-class pragmatism is Safai’s calling card. “I got my master’s in city planning but got my PhD in the labor movement,” he said.

A historical lack of city services and private investment in District 11 has left many of Safai’s constituents yearning for better quality of life and concerned about the availability of affordable housing. So, in addition to marshaling in over half a billion dollars’ worth of investment in parks, playgrounds, and housing since he’s been a supervisor, Safai has pushed to expand the definition of affordable housing to include units suited for middle-income working families.

His district now has about 600 units under construction, 60% of which are affordable to working families. Under a neighborhood preference program, District 11 residents within a mile of the projects will get priority consideration for 40% of the units.

“I want to ensure that we’re spending our city dollars on worker protections, fair wages, apprenticeship pipeline opportunities — all important to working families,” he said.

With the pandemic sticking around for a whole lot longer than anyone had hoped, the past year has been another challenging one for tradespeople and all working people. We are fortunate to live in a great city in an economic powerhouse of a state. So, despite the rather low number of currently active projects (and new ones) relative to the boom years heading into COVID-19, there were a great many construction projects approved, kicked off, or finished in 2021 that merit mention.

This year, we’ve placed our top projects into four different categories — best overall, best-managed, best design, and greatest economic impact — and named what we think are the best two to three builds in each category.

Turn the page and read on to see what came out on top.
Happy Holidays and Best Wishes for the New Year to the members of Organized labor from our entire organization.

Headworks Facility

Location: Bayview
Developers: SF Public Utilities Commission, Carollo Engineers
General Contractors: Sundt, Walsh Construction

The SF Public Utilities Commission has invested more than $2 billion to modernize the Southeast Treatment Plant, a sewer system facility that was constructed in 1952 and has notoriously plagued the surrounding Bayview community with odors. This vital piece of infrastructure is the city’s largest wastewater pollution treatment plant. Work began in 2018 to get it seismically safe, prepared for sea-level rise, operationally efficient, and friendlier with its neighbors. It has received the Gold Envision award for sustainable infrastructure.

When it first arrives at the treatment plant, 80% of San Francisco’s wastewater takes a trip through the Headworks Facility, where debris and grit are removed from the stream in order to protect downstream equipment and better control foul smells. The $618 million Headworks revamp entails a brand-new facility, an upgrade to the Bruce Flynn Pump Station (which controls stormwater), seismic enhancements to withstand a 7.8-magnitude earthquake, and improved operational reliability. The new facility is slated for completion in 2024 and will process 250 million gallons of wastewater per day.

In addition to the project team signing a PLA that has resulted in solid work hours for building trades members, it also committed to hiring locally, emphasizing historically disadvantaged groups. A $3.15 million investment in workforce development and another $1.35 million in local economic development — alongside a CityWorks Internship Program to help residents enter the engineering and design fields — are some of the many contributions the project makes to Bayview.

UCSF Research and Academic Building at ZSFG

Location: Between the Mission and Potrero Hill
Developer: The UCSF-ZSFG Partnership
General Contractor: The Boldt Company

Through a partnership with the City and County of San Francisco, UCSF is building a five-story facility to bring state-of-the-art medical research, teaching, and administrative space to the Priscilla Chan and Mark Zuckerberg San Francisco General Hospital and Trauma Center Campus.

Work began in 2020 on the site, located between 23rd Street and Building 5, and includes a new road that workers completed on the north side of the facility.

The 175,000-square-foot building is estimated to cost $275 million and will replace several UCSF offices and labs in seismically outdated buildings. Additionally, the facility will house a patient research center and education space, including a surgical training facility and biomechanics testing lab.

A great many tradespeople have been out of work this past year, but the UCSF project has supplied vital work hours — particularly to about 50 Sheet Metal Workers Local 104 members, who have been on the job since March doing HVAC and architectural sheet metal flashing.

UCSF has committed to ensuring that 30% of construction jobs go to local residents recruited by Mission Hiring Hall. The university also contributed about $1.1 million to CityBuild Academy for a five-week course for local job seekers to receive pre-apprenticeship training.
Thurgood Marshall Academic High School Improvements

Location: Southeastern SF
Developer: SF Unified School District
General Contractor: Wickman Development and Construction

This year, a general modernization project has been underway at Thurgood Marshall Academic High School, 45 Conkling Street in the city’s southeast end, by the SFUSD. Founded in 1994, Thurgood Marshall High prepares a diverse student body for college and vocational careers.

The work, which involves many local trades unions, entails ADA accessibility reconstruction, fire and life safety upgrades, structural upgrades, general improvements to classrooms and administrative spaces, and the construction of interim housing. Asbestos found at the aging facility was also torn out.

Working for subcontractor ALCAL, Roofers Local 40 members have been working for months to install a brand-new roof atop the school and get the school fully waterproofed. Several trades have faced material constraints caused by ongoing supply chain issues, and for the roofers, this resulted in delays while waiting for insulation. Despite these challenges, the remodeling work has represented the pinnacle of construction standards and project management and will provide a safer, healthier, and more up-to-date place for the city’s students to learn and grow.

With ALCAL paying above prevailing wages, the atmosphere on the jobsite has remained positive and professional. With a portion of the work already complete, some classrooms have reopened to students while other areas are still cordoned off to keep the school community free from construction hazards.

BART Escalator Modernization

Location: Beneath the City Streets
Manager: Schindler Elevator

San Francisco’s heavily trodden escalators churn for millions of hours to get people where they need to go. Since the escalators at the Embarcadero, Montgomery, Powell and Civic stations were partially replaced 20 years ago, debris, brake dust and maintenance grease have accumulated, alongside a level of wear and tear that your average mall escalator would never experience.

For over a year, mechanics from Elevator Constructors Local 8 working for Schindler Elevator have been busy at the stations undertaking the most labor-intensive job known in the industry: dismantling the over-40-year old escalators down to their skeletons, cleaning them, and welding them.

After that’s done, Local 8’s elevator mechanics will install Schindler’s new equipment. They also have to construct special platforms to lower bulky equipment down into the station.

The job is as dirty as they come, but public safety is top priority for the tradespeople of Local 8, who are performing the equivalent of open-heart surgery for the public transit system. To keep the stations up and running, barricades are put around an area under service while other entrances remain open to keep travelers away from the dangerous work zone. Due to the piecemeal approach, the project will take about eight years to complete.

In the meantime, between 12 and 15 Local 8 members have a steady supply of fully funded work hours ahead of them led by Schindler managers, who have established a strong sense of mutual trust and clear communication with workers. When challenges arise, safety is prioritized, and a spirit of collaboration drives solutions.
One Steuart Lane

Location: South Beach
Developers: The John Buck Company, Paramount Group, SRE Group
General Contractor: Swinerton Builders

A monumental ultra-luxury condo tower is nearing completion on San Francisco’s waterfront along the Embarcadero. Offering sweeping views of the Bay Bridge, the Ferry Building, and beyond, One Steuart Lane is a stacked-mass structure that rises to 220 feet and contains 120 residences and 4,500 square feet of retail across its 20 floors.

It’s all wrapped up in a stunning ultra-clear glass facade.

The tower is one of several recent high-profile all-union projects sure to impact the city’s skyline. Condo units ranging from 839 to 3,000 square feet and penthouses up to 6,200 square feet feature floor-to-ceiling glass windows and sprawling outdoor terraces.

The project provided Glaziers Local 718 members employed by subcontractor Enclos with the opportunity to showcase their peak craftsmanship skills. On some units, glaziers installed massive sliding-glass balcony doors measuring 19 feet by 10 feet and weighing in at over 1,000 pounds using a robotic power suction cup attached to a crane.

In the lobby entryway, a canopy of two 3,000-pound laminated glass pieces hangs suspended using a fastening system also made of glass. In addition to the iconic glass exterior, glaziers also imbued the building with a prominent combination-stone-and-aluminum facade treatment. The finished product is a sight to behold.
Biosolids Digester Facilities Project
(a.k.a. ‘The Biodigester’)

Location: Bayview
Developers: SF Public Utilities Commission (SFPUC), MWH Constructors, Webcor Builders
General Contractor: SFPUC

Part of the Sewer System Improvement Project to upgrade the Southeast Treatment Plant in Bayview, the $1.6 billion Biosolids Digester Facilities Project is replacing and relocating existing but outdated solid waste treatment facilities built in the 1940s with modern ones.

A product of the wastewater treatment process, biosolids are nutrient-rich, similar to soil, and can be used as a synthetic fertilizer or soil amendment. The SFPUC is working with an MWH-Webcor joint venture, locating the digesters farther away from residential areas to reduce odor impacts and increase the overall quality of life and aesthetics for the community. The new biodigesters will produce higher-quality Class-A biosolids that will emit less odor thanks to a thermal hydrolysis process that will also produce energy.

The 400,000-square-foot facilities will have five above-grade and four below-grade levels able to capture and treat odors more effectively, produce more than 1 million gallons of recycled water per day, and maximize biogas utilization and energy recovery. In addition, workers are equipping the structures to withstand a 7.8-magnitude earthquake and be resilient against 36 inches of sea-level rise.

In addition to providing more attractive structures for the neighborhood and helping to fund local public art, the project also relies on local resident union labor and local contractors.
Although San Francisco’s Mid-Market lost considerable steam during the pandemic, building trades members have been busy at work in the neighborhood on several housing projects that, it is hoped, will prove to be transformative. One such project is the 500-unit building known as 1177 Market at Trinity Place, which also features a 55,000-square-foot Whole Foods Market, fitness centers, rooftop decks, up to 11-foot ceiling heights, and floor-to-ceiling windows.

The building is part of a larger 1,900-unit Trinity Place development in the final phase of construction by general contractor Swinerton, with some of the contemporary apartment units already leased. The project provides expansive views of the SF skyline and neighborhoods.

Members of Elevator Constructors Local 8 employed by Otis Elevator installed eight high-end cabs designed by Alameda-based Unique Elevator Interiors, which is also a Local 8 signatory company that helped realize the vision of architecture firm BAMO early on in the process. No expense was spared on the woven-metal bronze and stainless steel elevators, which feature both perimeter and base lighting, smoked mirrors, and granite floors. Each costing about $85,000, the elevator cabs effectively integrated premium materials for a remarkable finished product.
Mission Rock

Location: Mission Bay
Developers: San Francisco Giants, Tishman Speyer Properties
General Contractors: Hathaway Dinwiddie Construction, Nibbi Brothers, Swinerton Builders, Webcor Builders

Mission Rock represents a new mixed-use neighborhood for the city’s waterfront at Mission Creek and San Francisco Bay adjacent to Oracle Park. Replacing 28 acres of underutilized land, including surface parking at Seawall Lot 337, the project will deliver 8 acres of publicly accessible open space, up to 1,500 rental units (40% of them affordable), 1.4 million square feet of lab and office space, and 200,000 square feet of retail and restaurant space.

In addition to below-market-rate rents for nonprofit and arts organizations, a “Maker’s Row” will dedicate space for local manufacturers. Work also entails sea-level-rise resiliency, historic rehabilitation of Pier 48, and improved public access to the Blue Greenway Trail.

It’s estimated that the project will create 13,500 construction jobs and 7,000 permanent jobs and supply city services with $25 million annually. After years of negotiation, the SF Building Trades struck a PLA with the development team in 2019, securing good union wages and benefits, opportunities for local workers, and career paths for apprentices. Earlier this year, work began on Phase 1, with 23-story Building A to deliver 540 residences, 51,000 square feet of commercial space, a park, and retail and restaurant space.

The entire Mission Rock project is expected to be complete in 2025.

1001 Van Ness

Location: Cathedral Hill/Fillmore District/Van Ness Corridor
Developer: Coterie (Related Companies, Atria Senior Living)
General Contractor: Related Companies

A stately new 13-story tower is set to open its doors in March along one of the city’s most active corridors 1001 Van Ness. Its primary offering will be Coterie Cathedral Hill, a new senior residential care facility focused on the luxury set, with approximately 210 supportive housing units in a 13-story tower at the site of the former KRON-4 building. The project also adds 8,000 square feet of street-level retail to the neighborhood, plus 47 parking units within the facility.

Upstairs, the lucky first residents of 1001 Van Ness will enjoy their golden years in style, with amenities such as dining halls (there are five), a high-end restaurant, a bocce ball court, a rooftop swimming pool, and limo service.

Over the past six months, glaziers, like other trades, have experienced a decline in employment. The 1001 Van Ness project provides a vital work source for as many as 18 Local 718 members. That’s a rather large crew given that many jobs, on average, involve just two glaziers.

The work has entailed a high level of labor-intensive details, especially on the ceiling and glass connections. Though the project is wrapping up, about nine glaziers are still on the job adding meticulous finishing touches.

Subcontractor Highrise Glass employs the crew and has committed to hiring all union glaziers who live local to the Bay Area for the project.
Kaiser’s Labor-Friendly Days Are Long Gone

Kaiser Permanente touts itself as a labor-friendly employer, but the days of enlightened relations with workers are long gone. According to market statistics database Statista, Kaiser has reported a $13.8 billion profit over the past two years. Its reserves total $44 billion. A company with such immense resources should be the best place to work and receive care. But Kaiser’s executives are focused on making even more money — at the expense of their patients and union workers.

Years of increasingly strained relations with its workforce culminated in a series of strikes and threatened strikes in fall 2021 by tens of thousands of Kaiser workers in California, Oregon, and Washington.

In bargaining, Kaiser sought huge takeaways that would have cut wages for new workers by more than 25% and give current employees raises that wouldn’t come close to matching inflation. That’s no way to treat people who cared for patients and kept hospitals running during a pandemic. But Kaiser doesn’t care.

The company is still refusing to offer a fair contract to its Northern California stationary engineers, represented by IUOE Local 39, who have been on strike since September. Over the past three months, members of the National Union of Healthcare Workers have held individual sympathy strikes with the engineers, and on November 19, we held a one-day solidarity strike.

NUHW-represented Kaiser workers, who include psychologists, social workers, and therapists in California and Hawaii, are quick to stand up for their colleagues in other Kaiser unions because we’ve seen firsthand how Kaiser’s focus on profits harms workers and patients.

For the past decade, we have been fighting to fix Kaiser’s broken mental healthcare system, which forces Kaiser patients to wait up to three months between therapy appointments. We’ve seen Kaiser grow wealthier and wealthier while our patients suffer more and more, waiting even longer for care.

In contract negotiations, Kaiser has rejected our proposals to increase staffing, recruit more bilingual therapists, and reduce the unsustainable caseloads that are causing therapists to leave Kaiser. Although negotiations started in July, Kaiser has still not made a proposal on wages and benefits.

Kaiser isn’t considering our proposal to increase staffing, even though it will need to hire many more mental health clinicians to comply with SB 221. The law, which our union spearheaded, goes into effect in July 2022 and requires health insurers to provide follow-up mental health therapy appointments within 10 business days unless their therapist determines that a longer wait would not be detrimental. Currently, many Kaiser patients are being forced to wait between one and three months between therapy appointments. A survey conducted by NUHW of Kaiser mental health clinicians released earlier this year found that:

• 80% reported that their clinics are too understaffed to provide appropriate and timely care to patients;
• 65% reported that every day they must schedule return appointments further into the future than is clinically appropriate for their patients;
• 87% reported that weekly individual psychotherapy appointments are unavailable for patients who need them; and
• 55% reported that during the past six months, they’ve considered leaving.

Kaiser, the nation’s wealthiest nonprofit HMO, should be the model employer and the best place to get care. But it has chosen to be a model of unequal, unethical care. Behind its persistent propaganda is a company that is attacking its workers and failing its patients. And the only way to make Kaiser find its way again is for workers to stand together and demand change.
The housing crisis we’ve been suffering for decades here in San Francisco isn’t going away. In fact, it’s only getting worse. But the solutions are right in our hands. So, how bad has the problem become in San Francisco? According to the SF Planning Department’s just-released Jobs Housing Fit Report, the city was short more than 124,000 needed housing units as of 2019, including more than 53,000 units affordable to households earning below 120% of the city’s area median income.

After factoring in projections of intensified future development, the report predicts the city’s housing deficit will decline to about 106,000 units by 2040, but the affordable housing shortfall is expected to increase by 3,000 units. Meanwhile, a recent joint report from the San Francisco Labor Council and San Francisco Council of Community Housing Organizations found that just 7% of the city’s workforce could afford current market rents, with over 40% totally priced out of living in the city they serve.

Those numbers are shocking. While a large portion of San Francisco’s affordable housing demand is coming from cost-burdened low-wage workers trying to make ends meet, many public employees fall into the affordability gap between the patchwork of subsidized housing programs and what’s available in the private market.

Simply put: Too few people who work for a living can afford to have a home within San Francisco city limits, and the tools we’re trying to use to fix this problem are inadequate to the job.

If working people are expected to be a part of economic life in any city — and, in particular, in the nation’s biggest cities — then they deserve reasonable and affordable places to live within those cities’ borders. It’s high time we act with a real and aggressive sense of urgency that meets the severity of this problem and ensures affordable homes become available without delay. In a city as densely populated and fixed in land mass as San Francisco, we have no time to spare.

One way to start making progress here is with a big push to create social housing, which is housing that uses a self-sustaining finance model to invest excess rent into affordability rather than extracting it as profit for investors. You could think of it as a sort of a non-profit co-op model that’s good for renters, who invest in each other rather than in a landlord’s real estate portfolio. In that way, such a model can better meet the housing needs of working families regardless of income.

We already know that the people of this city are in favor of social housing; last November, San Franciscans voted overwhelmingly to raise the transfer tax for large real estate transactions and put that money into both social housing and rent relief for struggling tenants. Voters understood that the scale of our housing crisis demands innovative solutions, passing the Proposition I transfer tax by a nearly 20-point margin, as well as its companion, Proposition K, which authorizes the development of 10,000 publicly owned housing units by almost 50 points.

While Labor wasn’t united in support of Prop I because of its uncertain impacts on their work and pension funds, the measure passed and revenue is now coming in. And while those fears may prove true in the future, the devastation from the decline of the city’s construction economy is very real and has left thousands of building trades members without employment. Using these Prop I funds for housing construction will get this union members back to work, doubling its positive impact for the city.

So, what’s the hold-up? Unfortunately, it’s a lack of imagination. The investment in social housing — as demanded by this city’s voters — requires a rapid expansion of municipally owned housing. We can’t expect the nonprofit sector and private developers to handle this for us, at least not entirely. To achieve public social housing, we might look to L.A.’s dramatic expansion of its rail system during the early years of the Obama administration, and a similar recent move in Seattle.

As for financing: On December 1, the SF Board of Supervisors voted to appropriate $64 million in COVID reserves to emergency housing acquisition with a veto-proof majority. So, let’s start there.

These reserves could be used to start building a city- or county-owned-and-operated social housing portfolio by acquiring existing rent-controlled buildings, virtually all of which boast positive cash flow and significant pandemic-related vacancies, as well as strategic land banking.

Then, a $3 billion bond backed by a portion of future Prop I revenues (an expected average of nearly $200 million per year, according to the controller), will give San Francisco the capital necessary to pick up the tools and get to work in creating up to 5,000 mixed-income social housing units in the next five years.

Directing these funds to new construction, starting first with the thousands of units in long-ago approved but stalled small projects concentrated in communities facing serious housing pressures, will meet a multitude of needs. Let’s make sure city hall and our supervisors commit the resources needed to put people to work and build desperately needed housing. Let’s do all we can to stabilize San Francisco’s housing market. Let’s remind our elected officials that voters of this city have mandated it.

Let’s house our workforce before it disappears completely.

GoFundMe for Tom Angstadt
Local 22 member Tom Angstadt was recently involved in a major car accident. While driving in Pacifica with his son, a semitruck that had lost its brakes flew in front of Tom’s truck, causing his vehicle to collide with the semi. A total of five cars were involved in the crash, but Tom sustained the most serious injuries. He is currently in a coma in the intensive care unit. He has suffered a major brain injury as well as multiple injuries to his extremities. A GoFundMe has been set up to provide assistance to him and his family. Please visit gofundme.com/tom-and-zach-angstadt-medical-living-expenses if you wish to donate.

Here’s the Deal
By Kenny Lukas
Now that we’ve survived through 2021, it appears that the great majority of us have made it out alive. We listened to the medical experts, followed their advice, and ignored the anti-vax B.S. While we’re not out of the woods, we are on our way to healthier, happier lives.
We must now continue to follow the science and listen to the doctors instead of the radio hacks whose only goal is to increase their audience and popularity at the expense of their fans. They care about neither you nor your family. They’re in it for fame and fortune. As Mr. T used to say, “I pity the fool.”

BUSINESS MANAGER’S REPORT

Spirit of the Season
During this time of the year, Local 6 has traditionally made barrels available for our members to drop in a toy to donate to the SF Firefighters Local 798 Toy Program. Your generosity has always been greatly appreciated by our sisters and brothers in Local 798. You have all truly exhibited the spirit of the season!

This year, even with the pandemic and its associated risks, the Local 798 Toy Program provided barrels at the hall. The generosity of our members is amazing. Thousands of families — many of whom have had their lives upended due to the pandemic and are still suffering as a result — would have had to go without gifts for their children this year if not for the tireless efforts of members like you, and the hard work of Local 798 volunteers.

Members who were unable to stop by with an unwrapped toy can visit SFFirefightersToys.org to learn how to help or to make an online donation. You may also send a check or money order to: San Francisco Firefighters’ Toy Program, 1139 Mission St., San Francisco, CA 94103.

Sound and Communications
The Sound and Communications allocation ballot took place in November and took effect December 1. Letters notifying affected members were mailed out in advance, and the balloting took place online.

As this is an area-wide agreement, one of the ballot questions was whether to establish a vacation fund reflecting a 3% deduction for the vacation account. The particulars of the vacation are still being hammered out and a more thorough update will be mailed to Unit 6 members when the information is available and finalized.

Wage update sheets, along with a summary of any notable changes, will be mailed out to the members of the Sound and Communications unit. Members are reminded that the current Sound and Communications agreement is posted online in the members section of the Local Union’s website.

Year-End Thoughts
This year is quickly drawing to a close, and I want to take this opportunity to wish you all a happy holiday season and to express my hope that 2022 is both healthy and prosperous. If you’re out celebrating, please make sure to designate a driver.

With the news of yet another COVID variant, there’s a feeling that this is pandemic will continue to drag on indefinitely. We’d hoped that the vaccines would provide a light at the end of the tunnel, but distrust of — and misinformation about — them have hampered efforts to fully reopen our economy.

Vaccination is proved to be the most effective way of fighting the virus. We remain hopeful that work will pick up in the near future, but there is no guarantee how fast this will happen. Currently, many companies are sticking to a work-from-home model and trying to figure out what the post-COVID workplace will look like.

COVID has had enormous impacts on the electrical construction industry, not the least of which is the cost associated with safety plans. The overwhelming majority of property owners now require that contractor personnel working in their facilities provide proof of vaccination. That is their right as a property owner.

Local 6 has seen marked drop-in work hours over the last year, as our tenant improvement market has slowed. As a result of the last boom in construction, we were able to build our plan reserves and thus provide some emergency coverage for many members who would’ve otherwise lost health coverage. This coverage was not endless, however, we hope that in the new year we will see hours returning and our members back on the payroll in 2022.

For those workers who fall outside the ranks of organized labor, 2021 was yet another year of challenges never before seen. Low wages, little to no safety standards, and a lack of voice in the workplace are just some of the injustices these workers face with regularity. This year saw workers still having to choose between their health and their housing, their children’s safety and their education, and their aging parents and the ability to stay employed.

These are choices no family should be forced to face, and they definitely should not have to do it alone.

Labor unions are organizations of people who believe hard work deserves fair compensation, jobsite safety, and adequate healthcare. We believe that by standing together, workers have the ability to raise their standard of living. Though far from perfect, we believe that we — despite our shortcomings — stand on the right side of history.

Locally, the struggle of workers and working families continues unabated. The Stationary Engineers have been involved in a prolonged strike at Kaiser Hospital for a fair contract without cuts. One job should be enough for working people, and standing together, we will all achieve that. As good trade unionists, our members have respected their struggle, and many have walked in solidarity on their picket line — just as we would like for them to do for us, should the need arise in the future.

In closing, I remind you that this is a great time to recommit to the cause for which the IBEW stands. The first line in the IBEW constitution states: “Our cause is the cause of human justice, human rights, human security.” That cause extends beyond the electrical industry, and it should be we who work to ensure that all can be represented, no matter how they toil for a living.

Point those who have yet to join our ranks in labor in the right direction. Let them know that there are people who are willing to help them organize their workplaces.

Stay Safe, Save for a Rainy Day, and Come to a Union Meeting

FROM THE DESK OF JORDAN MONDRAGON

I would like to introduce myself as a new field representative for BAC Local 3. My name is Jordan Mondragon, and I’ve been a proud member of Local 3 for 19 years. I cover the counties of Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Monterey, and San Benito, as well as parts of the South Valley.

I’ve been visiting numerous job sites to meet members of our union and talk to nonunion workers about the benefits of being a union member. I’ve attended building trades meetings and met many other building trades affiliates.

Thank you all for the warm welcome. I look forward to representing the members of Local 3 and assisting the building trades councils in expanding union labor.

I attended the Veterans Day Parade on November 11 in San Jose. BAC and other building trades representatives honored all of our veterans for their bravery, service, and sacrifice.

We will be starting negotiations for our brick agreement in December and starting negotiations for our refractory, tile, and terrazzo agreements in the spring of 2022. Please attend your chapter meeting and any special called meetings to give your input on negotiations. Many of these meetings will be held on Zoom.

Local 3 apprenticeship programs will be holding numerous journeyman upgrade classes in the coming months. All our masonry trades should visit bac3train.com for more information. Tile members should visit nctijatc.org.

I wish all of our union brothers and sisters a safe and happy holiday.

Honor All Pickets,
Jordan

SECRETARY-TREASURER
From the Desk of Chris Moyer

Some of us like President Joe Biden. Some of us, not so much. Be that as it may, it’s hard to argue against his administration’s commitment to our nation’s recovery and to the future prosperity of her citizens.

On November 25, Biden signed into law an infrastructure-funding bill worth $1 trillion. What that means to folks like us is an investment of over $100 billion dollars in bridges and highways and more than $65 billion toward freight and passenger railway systems, which ought to help the high-speed rail project keep our members busy for a while.

The bill also provides nearly $40 billion for public transit systems. This could translate into less traffic congestion for you to deal with while trying to get to and from all that bridge, highway, and HSR work. There are also going to be $55 billion poured into the nation’s water systems, which should mean cleaner, safer drinking water and better sanitation, and — oh, yeah — we work on that stuff too.

The impact of this legislation on some of our work might not be immediately obvious, but it should help to ensure good work opportunities for the foreseeable future.

Looking ever further down the road, U.S. Interior Secretary Deb Haaland announced that her department hopes to hold offshore lease sales by 2025 for the purpose of developing wind farms along both the east and west coasts as well as the Gulf of Mexico, with a production goal of 30 gigawatts of clean offshore energy by the year 2030. This would provide about 75,000 jobs, equate to enough electricity to power 10 million homes, and remove tons of carbon from our atmosphere.

It took a while, but Infrastructure Week finally got here.

As for the present, mandatory jobsite vaccination programs are starting to come into effect. San Francisco employees working at the port are now required to be vaccinated, as are folks working in the BART tube.

Some of us were given the honor of representing labor in the San Jose Veterans Day parade. The word went out through the Santa Clara and San Benito Building and Construction Trades Councils. The parade route was lined, however sparsely, with old soldiers, young kids, and some active-duty service members in uniform. There might not have been a lot of folks watching, but to the ones who were, being there meant something special.

We’ve been getting back into the swing of in-person career fairs again, and we got to attend one at the Del Val Adult Learning Center recently. Events like this give us a perfect opportunity to showcase the broad range of career opportunities we offer. It’s nice interacting with young people and seeing the looks on their faces when we show them a pile driver wage card.

Just a reminder that the December union meeting will occur a week earlier, on the third Thursday of the month. In January, the normal schedule will return.

… If you find yourself thinking back to that trillion-dollar infrastructure price tag, take a moment to consider that the interstate highway system — begun by President Dwight Eisenhower in 1956 and basically completed in 1991 — is estimated to have cost about $114 billion. In 2008, that same amount of money would’ve equaled half a trillion.

Now consider the total value of all the food, goods, services, and GDP that our interstate system has carried over the past half-century.

Have a Very Merry Christmas.
The schedule for next year’s meetings is not available at this time. Please check the monthly letters.

On September 20, we held the Roger Hamilton Memorial Golf Invitational. It’s our fundraiser for the Mesothelioma Research Foundation of America. At the Retirees Luncheon on December 3, former Local 16 business manager Mel Breshears, who is now vice president of the International, presented Dr. Gill with a check for $91,000 raised at the invitational.

All the money goes to Dr. Gill’s research, which has just been granted breakthrough designation by the FDA. That means clinical trials will be put on the fast-track. This is great news for the treatment of mesothelioma.

From the Manager’s Desk
As elevator constructors, we create moving art. Some of the finest craftspeople in the building trades are elevator constructors. From welding to piping, sheet metal, and woodwork, we do it all.

We must create that art safely. Lately, we’ve had a spate of safety-related writeups from our employers. The IUEC takes these matters very seriously, as do our employers. Safety policies can seem onerous and unwieldy at times, but they exist for a reason. I would urge you to follow all such policies to the letter.

If a company’s safety policy requires you to stop what you’re doing to lock and tag out a power source, then take the time to lock and tag out the power source. If the task you’re working on requires that you tie off, go to your van, and get your fall protection, then take the time to put it on and use it.

The IUEC encourages you to do the job right and to do the job safely — but also not to cut corners. Speed should never be a driving factor behind our actions on a job site, regardless of what incentives a company might promise us for turning in a job faster. Companies will always push to have a crew off the job faster, but the time you save leaving tasks incomplete or done poorly is quite often lost when an adjuster has come in after you to complete an unsatisfactory elevator.

Safety, quality, and craftsmanship are the pillars of our work. I was told by a mechanic years ago, “There’s never enough time to do things right the first time, but there’s always time to come back and fix it when it’s wrong.”

So, as you do the job safely, also take the time to do the job right. And take the time to teach your apprentices to do so as well. From Merriam-Webster, the definition of an apprenticeship is “an arrangement in which someone learns an art, trade, or job under another.” I would argue that our apprentices learn all three.

I was told on my first day as a probationary that this is not a job — it is a career. To all the apprentices, I repeat that sentiment. Treat this as your career, and take it seriously. Take the time to learn. Ask questions when appropriate, and take notes. Take home prints and study them.

To the mechanics: These are the men and women who are going to be paying into your pension and teaching your children how to work on elevators one day. Train them to take over for you.

We have locked in the date for the Honorary Members’ Luncheon for Saturday, Jan. 29, 2022. Space will be limited and vaccinations required due to COVID restrictions in place in San Francisco. However, we hope to accommodate everyone who wishes to attend, and invitations will be mailed this month to all honorees.

Finally, you all should have received a mailer with next year’s wage information. Make sure to keep an eye on your checks to ensure the pay scales are right and you’re getting all the proper deductions for your medical and 401(k).

If you aren’t enrolled in the 401(k) program, consider it. It’s never too early or too late to start, but the earlier you start, the better off you’ll be.

That’s enough from me for this month. I wish you all a safe and happy holiday season.

In Solidarity,
Matt Russo

Brothers and Sisters,
Merry Christmas, Season’s Greetings and Happy Holidays to all!
The citywide PLA that was such a major milestone for the building trades, including the glaziers, of course, is now in its second year of existence. The threshold for work captured by this PLA is now at $3 million and will drop next year to $1 million.

As your representative, I have attended many pre-job meetings for work now covered by this PLA. The workload in attending these pre-jobs and watching for our craft will grow intensely as this agreement matures. I look forward to this because it means union work is being done on city projects that are funded by our tax money, which comes back to us in fair wages and benefits.

City infrastructure — utility buildings, public service buildings and maintenance, and parks, for instance — are covered by this agreement. How do parks affect glaziers? Have you ever visited Balboa Park and checked out the glass-walled Balboa Pool building and its sweeping panoramic views, or the cathedral-esque floor-to-ceiling panels of glass that enclose Sava Pool at Wawona Avenue? Have you witnessed the excellent architectural glazing work at Margaret S. Hayward Park? These are just a few examples of tax-funded glazing projects.

These and other projects will fall under our city PLA. They will be built, renovated, or maintained by contractors covered by the PLA or our union glaziers working for DPW. This upcoming year will be one of hope thanks to the federal infrastructure bill that was passed. This will also fund infrastructure in San Francisco and surrounding counties.

Times have been tough for many glaziers recently. Know that this infrastructure bill and other projects being erected now will be good work for us in the near future — projects like the Mission Rock development near the Giants ballpark. New steel is a signal that the glazing envelope is needed, which means opportunity for us, especially San Francisco residents.

Make sure to update your name on the work list on the first working day of the month so that when opportunity knocks, you can be reached.

Unfortunately, we’ve lost brothers over the past couple of months. Retired brother Jack W. Price, who initiated on September 15, 1981, passed away on November 26. Brother Nicholas Guidry, who was an apprentice, passed away on November 27. Brother Connor Frederiksen, also an apprentice, passed away October 18.

Our deepest condolences go out to the families left behind: Our prayers and thoughts are with you.

If you haven’t already heard, Local 718 will not be holding a holiday celebration this year. We are excited to throw a great bash next year, though, and the executive board is considering a summer event for 2021 as well.

Stay healthy and be well!

In Solidarity,
Bart M. Pantoja
Business Representative Glaziers Local Union 718
District Council 16

It’s your right to be Union.
From the Desk of Jose Oscar Padilla

We have restarted our monthly union meetings at 150 Executive Park on the third Thursday of the month at 6 p.m. Face-masks are required for entry to the building and must be worn throughout the meeting.

Our annual Thanksgiving dinner was postponed due to COVID-19 restrictions. Instead, we raffled off gift certificates at our November meeting.

We would like to extend our congratulations to the following members:

- Manuel Castañeda, who received his 25-year membership certificate,
- Enrique Guzman, who received his 20-year membership certificate,
- Oscar Urbina, who received his 15-year membership certificate, and
- Angel Gomez, who received his 15-year membership certificate.

We regret the loss of our brother Jesse Pagan.

Jesse passed away on November 16 at the age of 96. He started working in the trade in 1942 with Local 227 in Honolulu. He went into military service in 1957 and was initiated to Local 40 five years later, on February 1, 1962. He remained a good-standing member for the past 59 years.

Some of the companies Jesse worked for were American Roofing, Goodman, Alta, Fellman, Fidelity, Western Roofing, and Lawson Roofing. During his time with Local 40, he became a conference board member in 1966 and an executive board member in 1968. In 1979, he became vice president of our local, and then he became president, a position he held from 1981 through 1989.

He retired in 1986. Some of the places he travelled to are Puerto Rico, Ohio, New York, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Alaska, Mexico, and the Caribbean.

A Memorial Service for Jesse Pagan will be held on Monday, Jan. 10, 2022, at 1:30 p.m. at the Sacramento Valley National Cemetery, 5810 Midway Road, Dixon, CA.

Goodbye, Jesse, and may you rest in peace.

Have a Safe and Happy Holiday,

Jose Oscar Padilla
Business Manager

Manuel Castañeda receives his 25-year membership certificate.

Enrique Guzman receives his 20-year membership certificate.

Oscar Urbina receives his 15-year membership certificate.

Angel Gomez receives his 15-year membership certificate.
Bylaws Vote
Please note that January's Local 510 union meeting scheduled to take place on Thursday, Jan. 6, 2022, is a special called meeting in order to vote to amend the Local 510 Bylaws. Notification about this meeting was mailed to members in November.

Currently the Local 510 bylaws show 1939 Market Street as our monthly meeting place, and 6 p.m. on the second Wednesday of the month as our Local’s regular meeting time. The vote on January 6 will amend the Local 510 bylaws to show 55 Fillmore Street on Thursday, Jan. 6, 2022.

Optimistic Future
The Local 510 work calendar is fill-in bit-by-bit. January and February were partially filling in some of the gaps as well. Members should check the dispatch tape regularly and follow instructions. High call volume and repeated phone calls can overwhelm the outgoing dispatch message line, as was the case during the dispatch of workers during SemiCon/DAC. The office is looking into the matter in order to avoid such future events.

Contract Time Is Coming
The one-year extension to Local 510’s Trade Show and Convention Installer Agreement ends at the end of March 2022. Members who have suggestions for our negotiations should submit them in writing to the local by clicking on the “Contact Us” tab on the Local 510 website, online at local510.org. You can also submit them to mworth@local510.org or adosier@local510.org. Submissions can also be mailed to 400 Talbert St., Daly City, CA 94014.

Meeting Location
Local 510 had its November meeting at the IBEW Local 6 hall. Local 510 wishes to express its gratitude to Local 6 for allowing us to have our meetings there. The next regular Local 510 meeting will also take place at the IBEW hall at 55 Fillmore Street on Thursday, Jan. 6, 2022. Announcement to membership of these meetings was sent by the Local 510 office in Mid-November. These meetings will take place at 6 p.m.

The Office Is Open
The Local 510 office is open and staffed five days a week. Members who wish to come in and conduct business should call for an appointment. The office phone number is 650-763-5405. Annette Dosier is available at extension 1113, and Morgan Worth is available at extension 1118. Field Representative Peter Forni is available at extension 1111.

Training and apprenticeship questions should be addressed to Richard Northam, JATC coordinator, at extension 1113.

Respectfully and in Solidarity,
Morgan Worth

Salesforce Transit Center

close partnership to create for the city a crown jewel of both style and substance, as the center provides vital transit connexions within the region and beyond — and looks good doing it.
The tour covered the transit center’s 1,600-foot length: twice as long as the Ferry Building and longer than the Salesforce Tower is tall. TJPA Communications and Legislative Affairs Manager Lily Madjus
Wu said the new transit center replaced the “dark and dreary” Transbay Terminal, which was built in 1939 on the same site and sustained damage during the 1989
Loma Prieta earthquake.
The final product, Gonzalez said, represents the best craftsmanship of all of the building trades unions.
The center’s bold design, topped by a 5.4-acre rooftop park, includes an amphitheater; gondola; vaulted entryway and gathering space known as the Grand Hall; 37-bay bus deck that connects to the freeway; and wellness and fitness spaces within the six-story structure. There’s also a state-of-the-art security operations center to help ensure the safety of all who travel through.

Tradespeople at Transbay
One of the many tradespeople who worked on building the transit center was Operating Engineers Local 3 Apprenticeship Coordinator Meg-Anne Pryor, who started on the project when she was an apprentice. She was along for the October 27 tour and enjoyed seeing the culmination of her handiwork. She said the job was particularly challenging for her trade, the protection system supplied by union members is crucial in large infrastructure projects such as this because it can independently suppress or extinguish fires in areas difficult to access.

“The most challenging part of this job was access — being able to get in and out,” Torres said. “Coordination is huge when it comes to these projects because the areas are tight to work in, with only a few access points going in and out.”

The Future Phase
Torres said he’s hoping work on Phase 2 will kick off soon to help get Local 483 members who were sidelined by the pandemic back to work. In addition, he said the transit center will help workers travel more easily to jobsites in the city.
With Phase 1 complete, the TJPA and the SF Building Trades again partnered to successfully advocate for federal funding. This round will deliver a suburban high-speed-rail station and about 60,000 square feet of retail on the mezzanine level above the tracks.
It’s all part of a larger master project
the TJPA calls the Transbay Program.

Gonzalez said that with funding secured, Phase 2 should provide twice the work hours as Phase 1.

“We care about mobility and the economy, but we also care about climate and energy, and the idea that we can realize high-speed rail right here into the epicenter of San Francisco and connect it with all the intermodal transportation opportunities — that’s great for job seekers, that’s great for housing, and it’s great for the climate,” Gonzalez said.

THE TRANSBAY PROGRAM:
A Three-Part Punch List

The Transbay Joint Powers Authority website provides a useful and simple overview of the entire Transbay Program, of which the completion of Salesforce Transit Center — and all of its parkland, hangout space, retail, and everything else — was but one piece of a larger plan.
The full three-part project
description of the Transbay Program from TJPA.org appears on our punch list below. It is an ambitious program, to be sure, and it will cost money; its bold scope will be financed by a $4.5 billion federal allocation to Bay Area transit arriving thanks to the recently-passed infrastructure bill.

1. TRANSIT CENTER
Replacing the former Transbay Terminal at First and Mission streets with the new Salesforce Transit Center, stretching just south of Mission Street from about Second to Beale Streets

2. DOWNTOWN EXTENSION (DTX) Extending Caltrain 1.3 miles underground from its current terminus at 4th and King streets into the new downtown transit center and designing the rail system to accommodate California’s high-speed rail from San Francisco to Los Angeles/Anaheim

3. TRANSIT CENTER DISTRICT
Creating a new neighborhood with homes, offices, parks, and shops surrounding the new
transit center

The dome above the transit center in the middle of Salesforce Park allows visitors a peek down into the atrium that acts as the heart of the Grand Hall below.

Transit center tour attendees walk along a high-ceilinged train box, which is the framework for extending intermodal regional train transport and, eventually, connecting San Francisco to California’s high-speed rail line.

manding more, and eventually going on strike. According to California Historical Society member Dolores Waldorf, the subsequent formation of the Union Labor Party was a move by labor leaders to prevent the rise of an anti-worker figure like Phelan.

At the time, an explosion in union membership meant that there were 180 locals in the city. Conditions were ripe for the San Francisco Building and Construction Trades Council to begin enforcing the closed shop. In 1904, 42 unions were building trades affiliates, according to historian Michael Kazin, author of “Barons of Labor: The San Francisco Building Trades and Union Power in the Progressive Era.”

Other unions also embraced the closed shop model; however, the SF Building Trades successfully implemented an advantageous organizational structure under the council, relying on business agents to stand guard at jobsites to ensure that shop bosses followed contracts. The level of organization, coupled with a tight labor market out west, put the perfect amount of pressure on bosses.

In little time, San Francisco’s working class had become the highest-paid in the country.

The early successes boosted the role of unions in workers’ eyes and left them keen on pursuing the closed shop. According to historian Richard Walker, teamsters, sailors, and dockworkers got together in 1901 and formed the City Front Federation, which pressured the Shippers’ Association to pay union wages.

A strike involving more than 13,000 workers and backed by the San Francisco Labor Council lasted from July to October of that year. It turned deadly during a gun battle in which several workers were killed. However, with the city on the precipice of a general strike, then-Governor Henry Gage intervened on workers’ behalf, and San Francisco became a closed-shop city until World War I, when labor’s grip slipped.

“If the working class of San Francisco was down, it was not out,” Walker wrote. “When the Great Depression and the beginning of the New Deal began to weaken the power of capital, organized labor returned to the city with a vengeance.”

A strike by the longshoremen in 1934 was pivotal in reigniting the battle for higher wages and working conditions. After two strikers were killed on Market Street, the stage was set for a general strike by all San Francisco unions, effectively shutting the city down for three days, according to historian David Selvin.

Walker called the 1930s a decisive decade for American union power that began with the San Francisco general strike, led by Sam Darcy. Harry Bridges, head of the International Longshoreman and Warehouseman’s Union, was also a key figure. The decade also marked the revival of San Francisco’s closed shop status, which continued, fueled by prosperity and solidarity.

A lot of fighting and hard work got us here, and it’s the only thing that will keep us here.
