As the San Francisco Building & Construction Trades Council Approaches its 125th anniversary in February, labor leaders reflect on what's kept the council's fight for the future of working tradespeople alive and thriving through many decades of political and economic change.

“We have always been providing high value on display,” said SFBCTC Secretary-Treasurer Rudy Gonzalez. “What that really means is that we've been promoting and serving as a backstop in this fight for economic equality, safety on the jobsite and workers. We're working to secure a generation of work for people — and it's not something new. We've had...

After 125 Years, San Francisco Building Trades Council Adapts to Changing Times

♦ PLAs, Political Combat and a Commitment to Unity Fuels the Fight for Workers

As the San Francisco Building & Construction Trades Council Approaches its 125th anniversary in February, labor leaders reflect on what's kept the council's fight for the future of working tradespeople alive and thriving through many decades of political and economic change.

Building Trades Demand Workers Voice is Heard in Natural Gas Ban Law

♦ Local and State Efforts to Reach Environmental Goals Require Collaboration

In 2020, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors voted to change the building code, mandating that new construction be all-electric, thereby banning natural gas hook-ups for heating and cooking in new buildings. The move was on par with similar enactments by 30 cities across California and statewide efforts to limit greenhouse gas emissions from methane, otherwise known as natural gas, linked to escalating natural disasters such as wildfires due to climate change.

District 8 Supervisor Rafael Mandelman, the legislative author for the San Francisco ban, said that natural gas used in buildings is the second-largest source of emissions after transportation and that 80 percent of the city's total emissions comes from buildings. Although the original plan was for the ban to go into effect on January 1, SFBCTC leaders lobbied to get the date extended to June 1 to help protect workers.

“One area of remaining concern has been the potential impact on plumbers and pipefitters, who currently install much of the gas infrastructure and piping in our buildings,” said Mandelman. “I want to...

2021: Taking Stock of What Lies Ahead

By Rudy Gonzalez, Secretary-Treasurer, San Francisco Building and Construction Trades Council

Happy New Year from the Secretary-Treasurer’s Office. For me, like many, this greeting has taken on a new meaning coming out of a year like 2020. Our democracy has been tested like no other time in history, public health and structural racism are discussed with our children at the dinner table, the underbelly of an unjust economy has been revealed yet again, and we have lost too many friends, coworkers and family to a disease that is ravaging the globe. As these issues follow us into 2021, you might not be convinced this new year will be a happy one. But I look around our city and I see frontline and essential workers putting their health at risk to keep our City services, infrastructure, and frankly the whole economy working. I see union leaders hard at work protecting jobs and advocating for strong safety measures and guarding the healthcare and retirement security of this and the next generation of trade unionists. I see you, on the jobsites, wearing your masks and setting an example for how we can keep our industry open and still protect ourselves and each other. And I see union sisters and brothers lending a hand to those in need, volunteering at food banks, deploying as disaster service workers, and volunteering as political activists and member organizers in their local unions. These are the things that give me hope and signal that a new year has the potential to indeed bring happiness.

There is no shortage of challenges on the horizon for the working class, so the hardworking members of the Building and Construction Trades Council must stay ready. Lawmakers are quick to blame high costs and consequences of their own decades of failed governance on the working person. Lacking a context and respect for organized labor, neoliberal politicians underfund our schools, transportation, infrastructure, and even the agencies charged with protecting our safety. And then, as if surprised, they criticize and scapegoat a starved system and its workforce. Even those who could be allies for a clean economy dare to call us and our jobs “dirty.” We must organize and meet these and other challenges. We must be ready to defend our work; ready to educate and hold accountable our elected officials; ready to build back better as our economy recovers.

I am hopeful about the future of the SFBCTC — hopeful because the leaders that I have come to know at the trades are sensible, smart, and fierce advocates for their members. They prioritize, plan, and appreciate the moment we find ourselves in. Amid all the distractions, they stick to the fundamentals of union apprenticeship, employment, and representation. By tending to the core of what makes our movement strong, we will have the resources to act boldly and take on new initiatives and ultimately come out on the other side of this pandemic a stronger, more unified council.

I want to express my gratitude to the officers and staff of the Council. To take on this role at such a pivotal time, and as we enter the 125th year of the SFBCTC, is an honor I undertake with both humility and great determination, and I appreciate their vote of confidence in me. As I am the first Gonzalez to lead this trades union, it is not lost on me that we work in a movement built on the legacy and hard work of those who came before us. I may be a San Francisco native, but I recognize that ours is a house built by immigrants of the last generation and the generation before them.

Just as an apprentice enjoys the benefits of a collective bargaining agreement, fought for by the journeymen and women before them, I, too, benefit from the people who came before me. Our past Secretary-Treasurers and the Presidents who stood with them have left this solid foundation upon which I stand. Leaders like the late Stan Smith (Glaziers 718), Mike Theriault (Ironworkers 377), and Tim Paulson (BAC 3).

Stand safe, united, and strong.

Prioritize you this year
Protect your health with routine care

Maintaining and monitoring your health is more important than ever, especially for essential workers continuing to battle the pandemic head-on. Kick off the new year by scheduling covered preventive visits for you and your family. Talk to your physician about your options as some routine care visits can be done virtually. Because if 2020 reminded us of anything, it’s that staying healthy should be a top priority.

To learn more about how we’re transforming the healthcare system into one worthy of organized Labor and our family and friends, visit blueshieldca.com/laborandtrust or contact Tera Brandon Clizbe, vice president, Labor and Trust, or Mark Reynosa, account executive, Labor and Trust.

Informed by his Catholic upbringing’s social justice doctrine and motivated by a sense of stewardship instilled by his father’s lifelong career as a firefighter, he found purpose in building power for workers.

In 2008, he was hired as a full-time Business Representative and Organizer for Teamsters 856. He negotiated private and public sector contracts in Northern California, rising to the rank of Director, and was elected twice as Vice President. During his time at 856, he led organizing campaigns that nearly doubled the size and strength of the local union, which now boasts 17,000 members.

In May of 2018, Rudy was selected by his peers on the SFLC Executive Committee to assist the Council as Interim Executive Director. In August of 2018, he was nominated and elected unanimously by the Council delegates to a two-year term, becoming the first person of color and youngest person elected in the 125-year history of the SFLC. At the Labor Council, Rudy led the staff team to assist affiliated unions with political mobilization, contract campaigns, and strategic organizing. Under his leadership, the Council shored up its finances, hired the first-ever Campaign Director, and revamped the political and affiliate support apparatus. Rudy is most proud of the recently-launched Labor in the Schools program, which will bring labor curriculum and union awareness to a new generation of San Franciscans.

Gonzalez spoke with Organized Labor about his career and vision for the future.

OL: What have been the major influencing factors that steered you toward a career focused on fighting for the rights of working people?

RG: There’s nothing like learning on the job. My first campaign as a member organizer took me on 10-day rotations to Mississippi and Tennessee for about six months. It was a real eye-opener to see how vicious an employer could be to workers who were starting to form a union for the first time. It was also a moment of reflection and gratitude, as I became keenly aware of how I benefited from my union contract, which had been fought for and won long before I ever stepped foot on the job. Seeing people fear for their livelihoods and reputations just for saying the word “union” left a deep impression on me.

OL: Are there any particular experiences or accomplishments you gained from serving as Executive Director of the San Francisco Labor Council that will aid you in your new role as SFBCTC Secretary-Treasurer?

RG: In my first month on the job, we were knee-deep in the City-wide Project Labor Agreement campaign and struggling to win the Campaign to increase the Minimum Compensation Ordinance. We had a strike at UCSF, we kicked off the Prop G campaign to fund our public schools, and Speaker Pelosi was at our office holding a press conference to call out the GOP Tax Scam that had just been passed. We were also slowly burn- ing the fuse on a contract campaign that would start and end in San Francisco, with thousands of hotel workers striking the largest hotel corporation in world history (Marriott). The strike ultimately lasted 63 days! My experience juggling high-stakes campaigns with time- sensitive demands of union leaders and elected officials will undoubtedly serve me well in the Trades Council. Thus far, I have primarily been tapping into my experience as a Teamster negotiator. Being at the table is as much about representing the interests of our affiliates as it is about developing a strategy that encourages cooperation over conflict. That said, the threat of conflict is often what drives the path to reach an agreement.

OL: You’re beginning your tenure during a period of great economic uncertainty and social change. What do you think will be crucial to keeping members employed and safe during this time?

RG: The Council has a unique role to play during this critical period. As the pandemic rages and countless workers lose their jobs, and in turn, their healthcare, we have the ability to stay working, as essential infrastructure and construction must be maintained. That places a heavy burden on our crafts as we face heightened exposure in both a political sense and to the COVID-19 virus itself. Our emphasis as a Council will need to include regional policy coordination and on-the-ground support for our local affiliates. Internally, we can play this role by providing our unions with the best information to protect members from worksite and community spread and connect the public health apparatus to our local union reps in a meaningful way. Externally, the Council will be a strong voice for our industry, to ensure that public health and policy outcomes include the voices of working families of the SFBCTC.

OL: Building Trades unions face many challenges stemming from legislation that fails to protect workers and changes in the culture at companies and the construction industry as a whole. What’s your vision for overcoming some of these hurdles?
RG: Organizing. Organizing. Organizing. You don’t need a Ph.D. in economics to know that if we aren’t organizing, we are dying. When we are organizing, we have power — legislative power, market power, negotiating power, union power. Our density in a trade isn’t the only way to measure the strength of our organizing efforts. We are increasingly finding ourselves in a defensive posture with lawmakers. We need to have our apprentices, journeymen and journeymen organized, educated, and empowered to hold their elected officials accountable. That means weighing-in when our State Building Trades Council calls upon us and turning up the heat in the City when necessary. When it comes to winning our work, no developers, contractors, bureaucrats or elected officials can match the strength of organized labor. But we have to be organized.

How does COVID-19 spread?
COVID-19 mostly spreads from person-to-person through a virus that is in an infected person’s breath. The virus spreads through the air when an infected person breathes, especially when the person talks, coughs, or sneezes. Other people get infected when they breathe the virus in the air, or when the virus from the person’s breath lands in their eyes, nose or mouth.

People can also get infected from touching a surface that having been touched by an infected person, then touching their eyes, nose and mouth, but this is a less common way.

Why are construction workers getting infected with COVID-19?
Workers share space with other people in construction. In construction, workers often have to work close to each other. The closer you are to a person who is infected, the more likely you are to catch COVID-19.

Working in enclosed spaces:
Construction work often involves small indoor spaces, job sites elevators and trailers. Virus from someone’s breath can’t float in the air for a longer time in small poorly ventilated areas.

Physical labor:
When people are doing heavy labor, they breathe harder and faster than usual. If there is any virus in the air, they are more likely to breathe it in. If someone is infected with COVID-19, breathing harder will put more virus in the air.

Using face masks less:
Construction sites are often noisy. Noise from construction and nearby traffic can make it hard to understand what people are saying when they are wearing face masks. Workers also may not like wearing a mask while performing physically demanding work because they have to work harder to breathe through it.

Eating together during breaks:
A common way that workers get infected is by eating or drinking together. Eating together is a high-risk because people have their mask off at the same time. They are also touching their mounds, and people often talk while having lunch or coffee together, which can produce more respiratory droplets.

Other risk factors:
Smoking or vaping:
Smoking and vaping increases the risk of getting COVID-19. Breathing harder and faster than usual. If there is any virus in the air, they are more likely to breathe it in. If someone is infected with COVID-19, breathing harder will put more virus in the air.

City & County of San Francisco
sf.gov/Coronavirus

If you have COVID-19 symptoms, do not go to work. Get tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible. Until you get your test result, stay away from other people, in a separate room and use a separate bathroom if you can. Wear a face mask if you have to be around other people.

Eligibility for sick pay:
Many people with COVID-19 may be sick but not know it.

Many COVID-19 illnesses are caused by people who have no symptoms at all. They can infect others by simply breathing out virus particles which is why it is so important to wear a face covering.

Before you go to work, you must answer daily personnel screening questions. It is important to answer these questions truthfully. There are resources to support workers who cannot go to work because they need to isolate or quarantine due to COVID-19.

How can you protect yourself?

• Keep at least 6 feet away from every other person as much as you possibly can. Especially when you’re indoors.
• Eat or drink alone, at least 6 feet away from other people. Eat outside if you can.
• Avoid crowds.

• Avoid things like handshakes or hugs.

• Avoid sharing indoor spaces with other people.

• Open windows and doors to bring in fresh air.

• Avoid carpooling to work if you can. If you must, try to ride with the same group of people each day. Have everyone wear a face mask.

• Open the windows and turn the fan on, set to fresh air.

COVID-19 virus itself. Our emphasis in both a political sense and to the public health and policy outcomes include the voices of working families of the SFBCTC.

OL: As a tough year nears its end, what are your main hopes for 2021?
RG: My hope for 2021 is that we find increased unity among organized labor, and through it, the power to win our demands. This is my hope for our San Francisco Unions as well as the broader movement. We are facing regional and global issues. From the pandemic to the price of rent, from healthcare to transportation and infrastructure, the issues that confront our time see no city limits and respect no county lines. Of course, on a very personal level, my hope is for the health and safety of the hardworking people and families of the SF Building and Construction Trades Council and all who toil alongside us.

express my deep thanks to Local 38 and the coalition of environmental groups including the Sierra Club and NRDC and the Environmental Defense Fund who have joined them in insisting that as we move away from fossil fuels, we ensure a just transition for workers who will be most directly impacted by these necessary changes."

On November 11, the Board of Supervisors voted to amend the ordinance, not only to push out the effective date but also to require that additional “green” building standards be explored concurrently with the ban's implementation and that the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission expand opportunities for onsite, non-potable water treatment systems, greywater, solar water heaters, and other sustainable plumbing systems.

“They wanted this to happen January 1st and we got it pushed back to June 1st so that we can have more time to negotiate a just transition,” said SFBCTC President Larry Mazzola Jr. who’s also Business Manager of UA Local 38. “If we’re going to lose jobs, then we want to make up for those losses with stricter requirements for having water-saving devices in buildings.”

While Local 38 Training Consultant/Specialist Dave Fahy has been involved in discussions regarding the looming changes for the past year, the next six months will involve continued discussion with the City’s Zero Emissions Building Task Force. Mazzola Jr. recently sent a letter to Mayor London Breed outlining proposed requirements, which include that new projects be required to pre-plumb buildings for alternative water sources, install solar hot water systems or grey-water heat recovery systems, use a skilled and trained workforce for installation of the alternative water systems, and that the new projects have the option to use renewable gas sources.

“Supervisor Mandelman and colleagues listened to our concerns and took what we said to heart, showing us that they are serious about saving the climate but also about protecting workers and jobs at the same time,” said Mazzola Jr.

San Francisco has now joined a growing group of Bay Area cities from Berkeley to San Jose and Oakland that have passed similar legislation this year. Movement on the issue is also happening at the state level as Assembly-member Phil Ting introduced AB 33 in December, seeking to curtail the use of natural gas in public buildings and schools in California.

“AB 33 is a huge problem for us,” said SFBCTC Secretary-Treasurer Rudy Gonzalez. “We want to be on the right side of environmental justice, but this bill is completely divorced from any worker protections or just transition, so we have real concerns. There are 35,000 pipeline jobs between the Operating Engineers, Laborers, and the UA that are in jeopardy now, and they’re in jeopardy when environmentalists don’t consider workers.”

Gonzalez and others recently met with Robbie Hunter, President of the State Building & Construction Trades Council of California, who’s been pressuring state lawmakers to back off the bill and start over with a plan that includes workforce considerations.

“We need to talk about what conditions are necessary to be on the right side of living on this planet but not at the expense of workers,” said Gonzalez. “I’m not ok with rich greedy coal barons becoming rich greedy solar barons, and all we do is roll back 80 to 100 years of workplace safety and standards. We need to have this conversation in a way that centers the policy around workers and their community.”

The end of the Trump administration couldn’t come soon enough. The mob of whacko Trump supporters who ransacked the offices of our elected representatives was a punch in the gut of all Americans. This was all too familiar to people who came to our great nation from other places around the globe to escape this type of mob tyranny. The most startling thing about this mob violence is that those crazies were encouraged to commit their felonious acts by Donald Trump. This type of mob violence is straight out of Hitler’s playbook. I hope somebody will inform the so called “Proud Boys” and their ilk that their lord and savior Donald Trump will, in a short time join the ranks of the one-term disgraced presidents.

From the Desk of Steve Espinoza,
Greetings Sisters and Brothers,

I hope that all of you had a joyous holiday even though we were not able to spend it with all our families and friends. I am hopeful that by the end of 2021 we will all be able to enjoy the gatherings and celebrations that bring family and friends together again.

“Stay Safe and Healthy” is a phrase that I am sure all of us have either seen or heard by friends, family members, coworkers, checkout clerks or even at the closing of an email. I like to think that when someone tells me, “Stay Safe and Healthy Steve” that it serves as a reminder. We are all responsible for our families, friends, and those we work with. We understand how much they mean to us as well as how much we mean to them.

Safety is always a priority when on the job site when you are in the construction trades. It gets drilled into us daily from job site safety orientations, daily and weekly tailgate safety meetings. In addition to visual aids such as Caution or Danger tape and other signage that helps to remind us of the potential hazards that construction workers are exposed to almost every day. As Sisters and Brothers on the job site, we look out for one another and are genuinely concerned about each other’s safety. We all want to arrive to work, put in a safe and productive workday and most importantly, get home to our families safely.

Being healthy goes hand and hand with being safe. Not feeling well, tired, or maybe having muscle aches or just lacking the energy to perform your tasks while at work could cause a negative effect on how you think and react to adverse conditions when you are working. This could also put yourself and others at risk of becoming injured on the job. Eating right is a key component to staying healthy. I am the first to admit my love for fatty foods, but these foods will make you sluggish and tired not to mention having a negative effect on how you think and react to adverse conditions when you are working. This could also put yourself and others at risk of becoming injured on the job. Eating right is a key component to staying healthy. I am the first to admit my love for eating cheeseburgers, pizza and other fatty foods, but these foods will make you sluggish and tired not to mention wreak havoc on your immune system. Maintaining a healthy diet will help you to work safer and possibly prevent you from missing work due to being ill. Being healthy also keeps the costs down for our Health and Welfare plans.

As we all look back at the year that was “2020” we will remember the many challenges that we all faced, brought us closer together (figuratively speaking) and how they forced some of us apart. By staying safe we can all look forward to gathering with our family and friends and most importantly, get home to our families safely.

Business Manager’s Report

Looking Ahead at 2020
2020 has come and gone, and 2021 is here. With it comes a change in the political landscape and an ongoing pandemic. I want to take a moment and discuss some of what is coming at us this year.

Work Picture
In 2020, the work picture started strong for our private sector units. Tenant Improvement work, the bread and butter of our local industry, was very strong and, by all accounts, was poised to remain strong. Then our Industry was turned on its head as the world fell into the grips of a global pandemic.

Several large projects are already under construction, projects like the massive Oceanwide project at 1st and Mission streets. The beginnings of work for Treasure Island has finally broken ground. Sewer System Improvements, representing billions of dollars of public infrastructure work, have been bid and awarded to signatory contractors, and construction has begun.

The impact on our Tenant Improvement sector has been rather acute with many projects stalled, delayed, or even cancelled. This impact will have lingering effects moving forward as the customers will weigh starting work with waiting for broader vaccine distribution and reduced COVID-related costs. The cost associated with COVID safety measures is not insignificant and has forced many projects to be put on hold or to spread out their schedules. This, in turn, impacts our working hours and pocketbooks.

Our Industry’s ability to regain strong footing, both locally and regionally, is dependent upon an end to the current surge in infections, a return to manageable caseloads for the hospital systems, and a thorough distribution of the vaccine. Success in battling this pandemic will influence how this year shapes up and the opportunities it will provide. If Congress can find a way to work together, hopefully some near-term relief can be had and a robust investment in infrastructure work may be put on the table.

The Local Union cannot control the pandemic or the economy, but we will continue to work hard on your behalf to secure future work opportunities.

PLA Work
As your Business Manager, one of the duties I am charged with is to try and secure future work opportunities for our members. One of the ways we do this is by participating with our other Building Trades affiliates in negotiating PLAs (Project Labor Agreements). As Developers plan their projects, one of the variables they need to address is the construction workforce. IBEW Local 6 and the other Building Trades provide the solution to their concerns, namely a readily available and highly skilled workforce.

Last year we were successful at securing PLAs for the Potrero Power Station development, City College of San Francisco, and Citywide Public Works. These agreements will secure and expand our work opportunities over the next 20 years. We are currently in negotiations for a PLA with UCSF for the construction of a new hospital. The Mission Bay PLA, San Francisco Unified School District, Hunter’s Point Shipyard, Treasure Island, SM, Sewer System Improvement Project are all providing work opportunities to our membership in 2021. Our goal is to keep adding to those successful agreements.

Organizing
As members of the IBEW, we have an obligation to fulfill the objects of our great Union. At the top of the list is organizing all workers in the entire electrical industry. We encourage our members to have an open dialogue with electrical workers who are not members of our Union. Help these workers understand the benefits of being in the Union, and encourage them to reach out and join us.

As a member of Local 6, these workers will have a full voice and vote; both in contract negotiations and the Union that represents them. As electrical workers, having a strong membership during negotiations will demonstrate our strength and unity, and will make a difference when we sit at the negotiating table.

The benefits and wages won at the bargaining table help you and your fellow members to provide for yourselves and your families. Increasing our membership will help us to protect you and your rights for years to come.

Union Plus Scholarship
The AFL-CIO Scholarship applications are now available online at unionplus.org/benefits/education/unionplus-scholarships and are due no later than January 31, 2021. We encourage members and their dependent children who are currently enrolled in an accredited institution to apply.

Current and retired members of unions participating in any Union Plus program, their spouses and their dependent children (as defined by IRS regulations) are eligible. Grandchildren are not eligible unless a legal dependent (as defined by IRS regulations). At least one year of continuous union membership by the applicant, applicant’s spouse or parent (if applicant is a dependent) is required. The one-year membership minimum must be satisfied by May 31, 2021.

Your Future As You See It
We are in the midst of the three-year cycle for electrician re-certification. Every three years our Inside Wiremen must either complete 32 hours of continuing education to maintain the certification or retake the examination. Every three years, people wait until the last minute to seek their required coursework. Some have their certification lapse as a result. Don’t be that member; sign up for continuing education classes at the SFJATC.

Our ability to keep pace with a rapidly changing industry, now more than ever, is an investment in ourselves. We all benefit from a well-trained and competent workforce. It is what helps us to remain, as our International likes to say, The Right Choice.

This year the SFJATC began offering classes online, making it even easier for our members to maintain their skills. This coming semester the JATC is offering classes in:

- Advanced Motor Controls
- Cal State Certification Prep
- Electric Vehicle – EVITP
- Energy Storage & Microgrids
- Foreman Development Training
- OSHA-30

It is clear to all that we will see more and more electrical vehicles and, as a result, the need for our Industry to work with government and utility companies to incorporate charging stations into the structure of new buildings. EVITP and ESAMFAC certifications will broaden your future work opportunities.

Our employers expect you to use your skills to install electrical work. Your skills are honed in the field as you bend conduit, splice wire, tighten screws or terminals, and nail boxes to a deck. Our skilled trades are focused on the built environment, and while technology plays an ever more prominent role in our industry, it is important that we maintain our skills with classroom instruction that ties the technology to the work we do every day. Sign up for a continuing education class at the JATC, and bring a fellow member with you.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

2020 is in the books and we are off to a good start in 2021 with less than 10 members on the Out of Work list.

We have a couple of changes for this year. If you want to put yourself on the Out of work list, call 408-824-1280 and you can speak with District Council 16 administrators Ginny or Judy for assistance. Also, Local 12 will no longer receive over the counter dues. Dues will now be paid directly to District Council 16. Mail your check to District Council 16 Centralized Dues, 2705 Constitution Drive., Livermore, CA 94551. Please put your member ID and Local Union in the memo. Another option is through the website at www.dc16iupat.org and go to the “pay my dues” tab.

The Union food Distribution Drive-up Grab and Go continues through June 2021. Union members who live and work in San Mateo County who are unemployed due to Covid-19 can pick up food at 1511 Rollins Road. Contact Jenni at 650-619-3686 to register and for dates and times. This program is provided by San Mateo Labor Council and Second Harvest Food Bank. Volunteers are always needed.

Unfortunately, I must report The loss of another Local 12 Brother. Gerald Bruce Mc Dermott passed on December 7, 2020 from complications of Covid-19. Gerald was born on July 23, 1944. He followed his older brothers Dick and Ed as Flooring installers and joined Local 1235 on July 18, 1963. Gerry, as I knew him was a master mechanic in the industry. I had the privilege to work under his leadership as an apprentice in the early 80s and side by side with him later as a journeyman. I knew if I was working with Gerry it would be a good day. Gerry had many hobbies including racing his Sanger Pickle Fork Boat, skiing, riding his beloved horses, and showing his 1964 Plymouth Fury and his 1963 dodge Coronet at Mopar car shows. He last resided in Colorado Springs, Colorado and is survived by His wife Janie, His daughter Tammi, and his son Darren. Gerry will be missed by family and friends. REST IN PEACE BROTHER.

As always, I invite members with a special milestone in their life such as a birth, graduation, marriage, retirement, and sadly death to contact Juan, Steve, or myself to share a photo and a few words in a future article.

Respectfully,
Anthony Nuanes

401(k)/ANNUITY
As those who attended the December meeting heard, I encourage all members to take responsibility for their own investments and retirement. The union can only provide so much – it is up to each individual to prepare for the future. Start the New Year off right by investing in your retirement. Take advantage of this great benefit, so you can be financially prepared at the end of your career. Remember, every year you pass up is another year you don’t get back. Call the hall to get the required paperwork you will need to turn into your company for 401(k) deductions.

SOCIAL EVENTS
Local 8 has no social events planned until we can have gatherings of more than 10 people at a time.

HONORARY LUNCHEON
As previously mentioned, the Honorary Members Luncheon for 2021 has been cancelled as well due to the COVID-19 outbreak. We are sorry for the cancellation, but the safety and well-being of our Honorary Retirees and active members is of the utmost importance and cannot be ignored.

In closing, I would like to thank all Local 8 Brothers and Sisters for your understanding, cooperation, and sacrifices throughout 2020 in keeping as many Brothers and Sisters working and receiving health benefits, and helping each other through the wildfires and everything else we had to endure. I, for one, am proud to say I am a Brother in Local 8.

Sincerely,
Mark Thomas Sr

MEMBERSHIP SERVICES
DUES AND MEMBERSHIP
In accordance with Section II of the Traveling Expense Agreements, we are awaiting the CPI Index in order to determine if there will be a change to the mileage rates in 2021. New wage cards will be printed and mailed once that update occurs. You should have received a calculation sheet with your December mailing that covers January 1–January 31st. Please contact the union hall if you need another copy.

FREE ZONE CHANGES
If you want to change your free zone, this must be approved by the hall before you start working in the new zone. There is language you and the company must agree to before any zone change can be granted. Refer to the Local 8 Constitution and By Laws Travel Expense Agreement language: OTIS pg. 117, Section VII–Transfers. All others—NEII pg. 105, Section VII–Transfers.

PRESIDENT’S DAY HOLIDAY
Monday, February 15, 2021, is a scheduled, unpaid holiday. The rate of pay for all work performed on holidays shall be at the double-time rate.

Updates In The New Year

2020 is gone and the new year is upon us. With the new year comes the hope that science and a diligent public will allow the pandemic to abate so that we can return to work, little by little.

It will take time for the return to happen. Conjecture in the industry is that the work will return in the late summer or early fall. Moscone’s schedule shows tentatively booked events beginning in the early summer. In the meantime, event venues have been considering ways of safely opening. Venues recognize that their ability to draw events in the future will require having comprehensive and coherent safety and hygiene plans upon reopening. The Local 510 office has been involved in discussions on the matter, particularly with the San Jose Convention Center, which has been proactively examining how to open safely.

Some News and Items:

Health Plan Trustees have voted to extend the lowered hour-bank threshold for coverage by another quarter. Local 510 dues for the First Quarter of 2021 have been waived by the International for both regular members (Trade Show unit) and life members. You may have received a post card from the District Council on the matter of Centralized Dues Collection. Centralized Dues Collection is mandated by the International Constitution and is a provision of the District Council Bylaws. The card is simply an announcement of this change that will be in effect once our members begin to pay dues again.

Agents are in the office five days a week. Please make an appointment to visit the office should you need to conduct business that can’t be taken care of over the phone or by email/U.S. Post. You may contact the office at 650-763-5405. Morgan Worth is available at extension 1115, and Annette Dossier is available at extension 1118. Peter Forni is presently furloughed. Please direct all inquiries to either Annette or Morgan. Union updates are listed on our website at www.local510.org. Our union message line is also updated as needed. That number is 650-871-5405.

Questions about pension or medical issues may be addressed to Benesys. Their number is 925-398-7048. The first step for those filing for their pension is to call Benesys.

Respectfully,
Morgan Worth and Annette Dossier

From The Desk of Chris Moyer

Work hours dapped a little in December, as is usually the case, but the slowdown was nothing out of the ordinary. The situation at the Hall remains the same with access limited by County Health Code guidelines imposed due to the ongoing pandemic. As a reminder, we are able to take phone orders for shirts and hats. Members just need to pay for the shipping costs.

It looks like our next U.S. Secretary of Labor is going to be Marty Walsh. The 53-year old Walsh is currently serving in his second term as the 54th Mayor of Boston, having won re-election by just shy of a two-to-one margin. Walsh’s leadership should take the DOL in a significantly different direction than it’s been going under the previous administration and represents a refreshing emphasis toward actually looking out for Labor rather than management. As was shared in last month’s edition, Mr. Biden has committed to being a very pro-union President, which also shows promise for the National Labor Relations Board. The NLRB is normally made up of five Board Members, with one of their terms expiring in rotation each year. President Biden would potentially have four appointments during his upcoming term in office. All in all, working folks should have some refreshing changes coming our way.

Our clerical staff has asked me to remind the Membership that when filling out paperwork for various state agencies and other organizations, it is not accurate to list Local 34 in the “Employer” box/section. We can provide some dates of employment information, when we get a signed Release of Information form from the Member, for the organization that’s requesting the information, but what we can provide is fairly basic and limited so we usually end up referring them to the individual employers.

If you’ve saved all of your quarterly Trust Fund statements, you may have built up a pretty thick file by now, depending on how long you’ve been in the Union. For those who’ve wondered how nice it would be to be able to access a lot of that information online, as well as apply for early Vacation Fund withdrawals, there’s good news. You can now go to www.carpenterfunds.com and sign up to do just that. You’ll need your UBC ID number or seven-digit CFAO ID number, the last six digits of your Social Security number, your date of birth and an email address.

Last but definitely not least: This isn’t meant to be a political column but as a veteran who once swore a solemn oath to defend the U.S. Constitution, as well as the father of two sons who’ve done the same, I want to take a moment to talk about what happened this week in Washington, D.C. because it went way beyond just politics. Two days ago, as I write this, a violent mob stormed and occupied our nation’s capital – the capital that hadn’t been violated in such a manner since the War of 1812 - in an attempt to overthrow an election that was by all credible accounts conducted fairly and legitimately. What’s worse, they were inspired and motivated by the false claims of a sitting President of the United States, because of whatever reasons that I’m not qualified to speculate on with any authority. It is reported that some of them were armed and one ended up getting shot by those entrusted to defend the cradle of our democracy and the duly elected legislators within. They injured a number of the Capitol Police that they’d overwhelmed, one of whom died earlier today of the injuries he sustained from apparently being bludgeoned with a fire extinguisher. Federal authorities had already begun making arrests by this morning and, who knows how many, investigations will almost certainly uncover information regarding how bad it really was and/or could have been. My point is this: for over four years now, we’ve been hearing about how we need to “Make America Great Again” and we may indeed have our share of problems, like any country but, here’s the bottom line. We had a coup; it didn’t last much longer than an NFL game; it failed; the loss of life, while tragic, was nonetheless, relatively low; our government is still intact, and no one met the sort of fate that some might expect in other countries, for pulling such a stunt. When tested like never before, the United States Constitution and our Republic proved resilient and enduring. Again, we may have our problems but maybe we’ve been a little closer to Greatness than some have led us to believe, all along. May we never see such a spectacle again.

- Brother Keith Guthrie passed away 21 December 2020 at the age of 81. He joined the Union in July 1993.
- Please hold your loved ones a little closer tonight and be thankful that we live in the country we do.
High-Risk

spread through people’s breath, highlighting that wearing face masks is imperative when within six feet of distance from another person. On construction sites, maintaining six feet of distance can be especially challenging. It can be difficult to wear a face mask when trying to communicate with fellow workers over the loud background noise of heavy machinery. Many jobsites are also enclosed spaces with poor ventilation. The physical exertion associated with construction work can cause larger amounts of virus to be released into the air. In addition to wearing masks and practicing social distancing, public health officials encouraged workers to take meals alone, don’t smoke or vape near others, not occupy small enclosed areas with others, and refrain from car-pooling if possible. Opening windows for ventilation can help reduce risk.

“Public officials are really concerned,” said SFBCTC Secretary-Treasurer Rudy Gonzalez. “What’s different is that they’re able to track COVID cases by industry now. It’s flawed in that it doesn’t distinguish residential from commercial or public from private, so in their minds the numbers represent the entire industry. We have to shoulder the unfair burden of being the safest and most proactive, knowing that there are some in the industry who aren’t using PPE and don’t have onsite safety supervisors. So we need to show that we are renewing and redoubling our efforts to keep safety our top priority. The efforts aren’t only for yourself but for everyone on the jobsite and their families.”

Even among Building Trades unions, workers’ risk can vary from trade to trade and jobsite to jobsite depending on conditions. Jose Padilla, Business Manager for Roofers Local 40, said that in addition to following county health orders, a majority of the jobsites have strict safety parameters set by contractors that have kept them safe and open.

“As roofers/waterproofers, even before COVID-19, we have been required to wear respirators or face masks because of some of the materials we use and some of the applications we do, plus our work involves the use of gloves at all times and most of the time even goggles or safety glasses,” said Padilla. “At Local 40 we haven’t had a case where somebody passed away from COVID, and only a couple members have tested positive.”

Ramon Hernandez, Business Manager of Laborers Local 261, a trade that involves a large number of members to often work in close proximity, said that though guidelines are being followed on the jobsites and cases have remained low, he’s concerned about a surge in infections in January due to many people traveling during the holiday season.

“Everybody has to do their part — wear a mask and social distance, not ride in a car together, not eat lunch together and not share water bottles — all the things that should seem pretty basic but we just have to go the extra mile and be that extra careful until this vaccine kicks in and people stop getting sick,” said SFBCTC President Larry Mazzola Jr. “I am concerned that jobsites will get shut down. I know we’re deemed essential, but if enough jobs have multiple positive cases and people start getting sick, jobs will start closing down, and that’s what we’re trying to alleviate by being in front of this with these safety protocols and guidelines.”

Recommendations from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention indicate that construction workers may be part of the third phase of the allocation of COVID-19 vaccines. Construction workers are grouped into an “Other Essential Workers” category consisting of an estimated 57 million people who will be prioritized for early vaccination after other groups such as health care workers, seniors in assisted care facilities, and teachers.

While the CDC’s recommendations are non-binding and it’s unclear when the third phase will occur, adoption of the recommendations by state and local jurisdictions would help keep jobsites and communities safer.

Thank you to all the front-line workers going above the call of duty to keep us safe during these trying times.

Be Safe. Stay Strong. Buy Union.

REQUEST FOR FUNDS:
Engineers and Scientist requests received via email and phone call for funds on COVID-19 research but will be deferred until next meeting.

SECRETARY’S REPORT:
• PLA Administrator Pat Mulligan - PLA slide presentation
• Pat will be front and center and will take lead on this role. Pat thanked all for the work and efforts put in. Monthly training will be available for general contractors that is open to the public. Two new positions have been made specific to PLA which have yet to be filled. Team will consist of seven staff members.
• Review of SIP and COVID policies, latest missive recently sent out by Rudy Gonzalez. Construction jobs are being policed, and safe. Counterpart in South Bay is working on protocols and toolkit that will be shared via email later. Sandra Duarte is working remotely and comes into the office once a week.
• Transition going smoothly, Tim and Rudy work closely every day.
• SFUSD negotiations are ongoing, next meeting to be held Friday. UCSF did ratify contract to move forward. Email to all affected unions went out and has been concluded. Tim thanked Osha Ashworth and John Chiarenza for their help.
• Updates on PLAs, UCSF Parnassus still being negotiated, follow-up meeting to be held. Balboa Reservoir has slowed down, we are on record with the hiring of all union contractors. Letter of intent pending. Park Merced issues on parking and transportation. Teamsters issues have been addressed and waiting to hear back. Giants walk through and groundbreaking ceremony for Mission Rock was shut done due to current COVID conditions. Virtual Reality Prepares Teens to Enter Bay Area Building Trades Locals

CityBuild Students Used Oculus 2 Headsets to Gain Construction Skills

By Jessica Zimmer

A donation of Oculus 2 headsets helped attract a larger-than-normal class of San Francisco students to the skilled trades. Positive reviews have motivated San Francisco’s Office of Economic and Workforce Development (OEWD) to utilize similar equipment to enhance training objectives.

“It was fun to use the virtual reality headsets and software. Being able to do construction training and tool identification through VR was a new way of learning I’ve never done before,” said David Portillo.

Portillo, a graduate of June Jordan High School and participant in the Construction Sector Bridge (CSB) program, has now applied to CityBuild Academy (CBA), a 12-week pre-apprenticeship program run by OEWD.

CSB, a two-month introduction to construction program for 17 to 21-year olds, is offered by OEWD. Brightline Defense, a City-based nonprofit focused on environmental justice, Community Youth Center (CYC), a nonprofit that provides education and employment opportunities, Mission Hiring Hall, a workforce training nonprofit, and A. Philip Randolph Institute of San Francisco (APRI-SF), an education and workforce training nonprofit.

Eddie Ahn, executive director of Brightline Defense, said the VR training provided an opportunity for students to connect to nonprofits and one another.

“In fall 2020, over 25 students came to India Basin Shoreline Park over several weekends. Usually there are about 10 to 15 students during the prior winter cycles. The increase reflects the intensity of need during the pandemic for job training,” said Ahn.

Ahn said the teens separated into small groups, wearing masks and socially distancing. They connected to a WiFi hotspot the nonprofits brought to the park and took turns spending one to two hours in a simulated environment.

The software taught them how to use tools and identify hazards.

“Between shifts, nonprofit staff sanitized headsets and touch controller grips, answered questions about construction careers, and assisted students with paperwork allowing them to advance to CBA.

Ken Nim, director of CityBuild Academy, said the “thumbs up” from the CSB students encouraged the Academy to move toward purchasing VR equipment and modules. “We want to implement VR for our 2021 cohorts. It’s expensive to rent equipment and have an instructor present. VR is an additional tool to supplement existing great instruction by our union training partners. [It] allows students to get more safety training at an effective cost,” said Nim.

David Johnson, member and Business Agent of Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons Local 300, said VR can be a good tool for advanced students.

“You want to make sure CBA graduates are ready for the in-person, specialized training with a union member before they start. VR allows students to practice without worrying about sanitization and access to water hoses,” said Johnson.

The software for the VR equipment is created by TRANSFR VR, a New York City-based company founded by Bharani Rajakumar. Rajakumar said the software looks to be aligned with Multicore-Craft Core Curriculum (MC3) standards supported by national trade union associations. “As and when demand rises at the local level, we are more than happy to build labor partnerships to support the standards required,” said Rajakumar.

Miquel “Mick” Penn, community relations liaison for Swinerton, said the firm views its donation of the Oculus 2 equipment as a resounding success.

“Pre-COVID-19, Swinerton planned to coordinate with CBA and CSB to provide Red Wing work boots...coupled with a volunteer event with Rebuilding Together San Francisco. Brightline asked if we would be able to support their pivot to virtual training and provide Oculus 2 units. Swinerton didn’t hesitate to support our community partners in this unique effort,” said Penn.
longstanding leadership who’ve seen the Building Trades adapt. There’s such a great history in San Francisco with major strikes and important legislation that has shaped where we are today. The Building Trades have come a long way in terms of diversity, industry technology, economic prosperity, and the highest standards for safety.”

A historical work, Barons of Labor: The San Francisco Building Trades and Union Power in the Progressive Era by Michael Kazin, chronicles the SFBCTC’s birth during the depression of the 1890s through World War I, and how it emerged as a force to be reckoned with from the jobsites to City Hall. Although a conservative shift in national politics in the 1920s subsequently curbed its influence, the Building Trades continued to ride the changing times into the early 2000s when the initial foundation for a Citywide Project Labor Agreement — to be achieved many years later — was set.

More recently, the post-Great Recession economic boom of the 2010s boded well for union tradespeople in a city that has experienced unprecedented growth. However, the COVID-19 pandemic and the ensuing economic downturn is perhaps an even more illuminating backdrop to the SFBCTC’s dogged success in the face of adversity. When the crisis hit in early 2020, the council and union affiliates’ leadership sprung into action to maintain workers’ safety and joined private sector partners in lobbying government officials to ensure that construction remained “essential” and jobsites stayed open.

“The trades stick together on all the problems that we’ve encountered, and we tackle each problem together in a way where we’re all on the same page whether we’re dealing with the pandemic or dealing with a new mayor or new board of supervisors,” said SFBCTC President Larry Mazzola Jr. “The Building Trades has always been strong because the unions stay together and that’s the number one reason why we’ve been able to weather all the things that have been thrown at us over the years. We handle everything in a group and don’t have unions breaking off and going in opposite directions.”

Over the decades, the council has had a series of dedicated officers who dedicated their efforts to doing right by workers during the inevitable peaks and troughs in the economy. One such leader was Stan Smith Sr. who passed away in 2019, having served as Secretary-Treasurer for 25 years until his retirement in 2000. Former SFBCTC President Larry Mazzola Sr. recalled Smith as a leader who had a particular knack for instilling unity among the trades.

“In my 50 years in the labor movement, Stan was probably the most dedicated labor leader I ever met,” Mazzola Sr. had said. “He always stood up for the underdog and for working people. I am very proud to have worked with him.”

In addition to showing unflagging support to other officers and rank-and-file members, Smith spearheaded the Mission Bay Project Labor Agreement, which has secured decades worth of work for union members. Dan Fross, IBEW Local 6 member and retired electrical inspector is also the founder of the non-profit Building Safety Alliance. Fross, whose family has been in IBEW Local 6 since its founding in 1890, himself began serving as a Building Trades delegate in the mid-1980s. Fross attributes much of the San Francisco unions’ success to a strong reputation that’s been earned over the decades.

“We have always been providing high value on display. What that really means is that we’ve been promoting and serving as a backstop in this fight for economic equality, safety on the jobsite and workers.

— SFBCTC Secretary-Treasurer Rudy Gonzalez

San Francisco ready for rebuilding following The Great 1906 Fire and Earthquake.

“"If you’ve looked at the statistics, you’ll see that even though our wages are high, our efficiency is great, and when we build in San Francisco, they know that it will be built right and come in on time,” said Fross.

According to Fross, an important milestone was achieved by Stan Warren, who served as Secretary-Treasurer beginning in 2000 until 2004 when he passed away from a brain tumor. Warren was able to secure project labor agreements with both San Francisco Community College and the San Francisco Unified School District, which Fross believes set in motion the work that ultimately led to the passing of the historic Citywide Project Labor Agreement in 2019. President Larry Mazzola Jr. and former Secretary-Treasurers Mike Theriault and Tim Paulson, as well as other SFBCTC officers, had worked to get that monumental piece of legislation through the finish line.

Although the SFBCTC has firmly rooted itself in the city’s fabric, it hasn’t been immune to the decline of unions in the nation as a whole. “There was a time when every restaurant was union and every bar had a union bartender,” said Fross. “San Francisco was that kind of place. Those days are done. The new workers here in the tech industry are not inclined; they are of a different mindset. The trades are strong here because we’ve been institutionalized here for so long.”

In addition to securing project labor agreements, Mazzola Sr. attributes the success of the Building Trades to a commitment to unity and the willingness of leaders to put pressure on politicians. “You have to get along with all the politicians enough to get things done, but you can’t just do everything the politician wants you to do. You have to hold up your end and say this is what we want to do,” said Mazzola Sr. “You need to gain their respect, and these guys do that.”

Althogh he lauded the council for staying unified and working out problems together, he cautioned against unions’ trend of not respecting jurisdictions and doing work of other trades. “It’s only been the past 25 years that unions try to split off and do each others’ work,” he said.
Local 510 Members Still Sidelined by Pandemic

Dues Waived as Trade Show Work Remains Scarce

Since March 2020, Sign Display Local 510 members have been largely out of work due to the cancellation of scores of trade shows and conventions necessitated by public health orders due to the coronavirus pandemic. Among the Building Trades, Local 510 has experienced one of the most significant drops in work hours due to the continued restriction on large indoor gatherings, the environment in which most members work.

“2020 ended with almost none of our members working,” said Local 510 Business Representative Morgan Worth. “There wasn’t much in the way of work. Some of our members were employed to clear out warehouses as companies are downsizing or reducing their footprint because our contractors are hit hard as well.”

Early last year, Local 510 leaders had worried that many members would leave the union to find work in other trades. Pre-empting such an outcome, they decided to waive members’ dues temporarily.

“Fewer members are going to the other trades than I had anticipated,” said Worth. “There are a few, but not many. The difficult part for us is that our members’ dues have been waived for a year, and so we’re having to look at our budget very closely now.”

“Many members want to stick with this and ride this out,” Worth continued. “A huge plus for them is that their dues have been waived. If dues weren’t waived, it might be different because they would have to choose between rent and food and dues. So that would be one more consideration when they do their personal budgets. So that’s worked out for us as far as retaining our members.”

The result is that many members are collecting unemployment while they wait for a successful vaccine roll-out to re-open their industry, hopefully sometime this year. Some small jobs employing between four and eight workers have popped up occasionally, such as recently at the Warriors Chase Center Arena. Worth estimated that, on average, there have been fewer than 500 member-hours per month.

Another outcome has been the loss, or impending loss, of health insurance for many Local 510 members. A few on disability have retained coverage, however, because insurance is tied to work hours, without work, the benefits eventually terminate. Many found themselves without the health care coverage in December.

“We hope that we can return to work in late summer or early fall,” said Worth. “That’s the popular notion in the industry. There are some places around the country that have opened their venues, but in California, there’s a surge in coronavirus cases, and we’re really at the mercy of state and municipal guidelines as far as public gatherings and venues being open. That’s the kicker for us. We can raise our voices and ask to go back to work, but it’s not in our hands to the degree that we would like.”

Some companies are being cautiously optimistic in scheduling conventions for as early as July. While union leaders can make efforts to secure potential work, the companies also lack the final say in whether the gatherings will be allowed.

Worth said that venues like the San Jose Convention Center and the Moscone Center are developing protocols that could enable shows to be held more safely. This could include enforcing the wearing of personal protective equipment and arranging show floors to facilitate social distancing. Local 510 leaders have been active participants in discussions with these venues to help come up with solutions.

The closure of places like the Moscone Center has had far-reaching economic impacts on the region.

“People are trying to come up with a solution because they’re aware that the conventions bring in a fair amount of revenue to cities, hotels and restaurants,” said Worth. “Those places are also subject to civil and state mandates and won’t be able to operate at full capacity either.”

Local 510 members built temporary homeless housing in Salinas in spring 2020.

Move more, more often

You know exercise is good for you. But when your to-do list is a mile long, it can be easy to write off your workouts. To get back on track, follow these simple tricks to stay active.

Do it your way
Staying active is easier when your workouts don’t feel like work. Maybe treadmills and barbells aren’t your thing. But what about dancing? Shooting hoops? Taking a walk on a sunny day? (Psssst! That’s exercise!)

Divide and conquer
Exercise adds up. So if you don’t have a solid 30 minutes to spare, break it up into 10-minute bursts of activity, 3 times a day. The health benefits are the same — your body can’t tell the difference.

Keep workout gear near
You never know when you’ll find extra time for a workout. Stash running shoes, a bike helmet, or whatever else you need to get moving in your car or at the office — so you never have an excuse to stay put.
